Follow through of new techniques learned during speech and feeding therapy sessions are imperative to your child's continued progress. Motor speech and feeding therapy takes dozens of repetitions (if not hundreds of repetition in some cases) before a skill can be generalized into a child's everyday life. At the end of each session, your therapist will tell you what skills/exercises are most important to focus on throughout the week or until your child's next scheduled session.

Carry through at home is crucial to your child's continued progress in therapy.

Because we bill insurance and Medicaid, we must provide documentation that states gains are being made towards goals. If there is little or no carryover completed each week it will hinder your child's success with a motor speech and feeding program, putting insurance reimbursement at risk.

By signing this document, you are agreeing that parent/caregiver follow through is required by our clinic to meet your child's speech and feeding goals.
